Ok, the Twitter thing is COMPLETELY foreign to me. I would like to get connected to this resource (distraction) At present I don't have the capability. It's going to take a huge investment, isn't it?

Hi Dianne,

Twitter is not a big investment as far as startup time and effort. However you will have to find the balance of your time going forward. You don't want to tweet once a week and have a dead, boring account. But its easy to sit there half a day reading every one's cool tweets.

If you go to the Resource Bank of this site and search for Twitter we have a webinar that we teamed up with a couple of State Association colleagues for (Thanks Jesyca and Josiah!). It's called Twitter 99: When You're Not Ready for the 101. There should be a pdf of the slides and you can copy and paste a weblink from the abstract that will take you to a recording. Maybe that will help you get some of the basic ideas of Twitter without wasting too much time figuring it all out.
